■ Much of this issue focuses on the election, but there's also news about cheese and to be more precise research, which reveals how Swiss alpine cheese dates back 3,000 years. Staying on the cheese theme, there are also a few cheesy facts that will impress at your next dinner party!

News: Swiss community prepares for election

Bilateral tax agreements, electronic voting, national service, emigration, immigration, pensions, Swiss bank accounts, and, of course Brexit... We live in interesting and trying times. The political landscape is currently shifting right under our feet.

Consequently, the choice of UK representatives to the Council of the Swiss Abroad (CSA) is more crucial than ever. Voted every four years, the appointment of 5 new delegates takes place on Saturday 20th May during FOSSUK's (Federation of Swiss Societies in the UK) AGM in the Coin Street Neighbourhood Centre, just minutes away from London's bustling and culturally eclectic South Bank.

The first part of this annual FOSSUK event, which will be attended by representatives of the Swiss Embassy, as well as from FEDA

(Federal Department of Foreign Affairs) and OSA (Organisation of Swiss Abroad) in Bern, focuses on the usual AGM business and the much-anticipated UK Delegates' appointment.

Following this, two UK-based Swiss artists, painter Sandra Roduit and film director Francesco Bernasconi, will present their latest works. The full programme of activities continues into the evening with a drinks reception and entertainment from folk singer Silvi Vignola.

The following day the programme resumes with either a guided tour of London's unique and ever-changing street art or an exciting visit to Tate Modern's new extension designed by the world-renowned Swiss architects Herzog & de Meuron. John O'Mara, who project managed the construction of the Tate's extension, will give an introductory talk.

Save the date! FOSSUK AGM:
20th May 2017

Media: Social media connects Swiss in remotest parts of UK

Facebook groups allow people to come together with a common cause, they act as a platform to express opinions, post photos and share related stories.

I set up the UK's first Facebook group for Swiss in Wales in 2010, because the rural landscape of the country did not allow local-based Swiss nationals to meet up and interact on a regular basis.

More recently I created the 'Swiss in the UK' group and we have just hit the 200 members mark and are still growing steadily. Members live in all areas of the UK, including more remote areas e.g. the Isle of Wight, the Outer Hebrides and the Isle of Arran. The common language is of course English. However, in the spirit of Switzerland's linguistic diversity, 'Swiss in the UK' also aims to keep our linguistic heritage alive by sharing information and interacting in our Swiss languages. Why not join us and meet fellow compatriots from all corners of the UK.

2: Swiss Club Manchester

New year, new beginnings! The Swiss Club Manchester started 2017 with a fantastic social dinner that took place in January at The Cottons Hotel in Knutsford.

The candlelit event was attended by more than 70 guests, who also enjoyed special entertainment organised by club president Juerg Bentele and his

Happy faces at the Manchester social committee. John Plumb, a long-time member, played the accordion and everyone had the chance to sing-a-long thanks to the Swiss song booklets handed out to all those attending.

The entertainment concluded with some club members reading excerpts from Denis de Rougemont's 'The Federalist Attitude' in four languages. The well-known Swiss writer's text emphasizes the double responsibility of citizens within society: 'on the one hand as concerns his own unique vocation, on the other hand as concerns in the community in which he carries out his vocation'.

Report: Swiss alpine cheese dates back 3,000 years

A study led by the University of York and Newcastle University has uncovered the richness of Swiss alpine cheese heritage.

Residue found on ancient ceramic pots discovered in the Upper Engadine region of Switzerland showed traces of dairy lipids, revealing the earliest evidence of cheese making in the high Alps. This ancient cheese heritage, now confirmed as dating back to the Iron Age, is still in use today, but under threat by the increasing dominance of globalised food production. Gerhard Reinecke, founder of Alpages of Switzerland (UK) Ltd. is committed to preserving the Swiss alpine cheese tradition.

'My selection criteria takes into account fullness of taste as well as the use of traditional cheese making methods, often produced in copper vats on open fires' he told the Swiss Review. To ensure the highest quality cheese is presented to clients, Reinecke scours the Alps and ultimately curates a selection of only ten artisan cheeses. Discover the selection of rare Swiss alpine cheeses at www.alpages.co.uk.

LITTLE KNOWN FACTS ABOUT SWISS ALPINE CHEESE

- According to strict Swiss laws, cheese is only designated 'Alpine cheese' when it is produced in the summer months, in small artisan Alpine dairies located next to the meadows (alpages) where the cows are grazing at altitudes above 1000m (3000ft).
- Only 2% of the entire Swiss cheese production is Alpine cheese. Although often referred as such, Emmental, Appenzeller and most of Gruyère cheeses are not alpine cheeses in the sense of the Swiss legislation.
- The distinct taste of Alpine cheese is, in part, due to the variety of flora at such high altitudes. Cows whose milk is used for the cheese making, can consume up to 100 different varieties of herbs and grass – while their conspecifics in the industrialised agricultural environment of the lowlands are restricted to as little as five to ten varieties.

Interview: Swiss woman heading to Royal Garden Party

This issue of the regional pages has focused primarily on the upcoming delegates' election. From the 16 profiles of those participating it is clear that each individual wants to make a difference, whether it is politically, socially or in education. They all stated their commitment to working with the Swiss diaspora in the UK. But of course, there are a variety of ways in which we can make a difference in our communities.

Lucia Hildegard Watson, who was born in the Canton of Thurgau and has lived in the UK since the mid-60s, has spent most of her life helping those less fortunate and in need in the Ipswich area. At the end of last year Lucia was recognised for her outstanding charity work and was awarded a British Empire Medal in the New Year's Honours List. In the following interview, Lucia describes why the voluntary sector became so important in her life.

Lucia receives an award for her community service in Ipswich

Lucia Hildegard Watson (LHW): My interest in assisting others, particularly the aged, but also the young, most likely stemmed from my losing both parents at an early age. The interest in volunteering possibly stemmed from the situation when my husband's cousin emigrated to the USA. She had been visiting and checking on an elderly lady in a nursing home in our local area. She asked me to take over when she returned to the US, as the lady had no known family to look after her. This led to me visiting other residents in the nursing home and then as our children were growing up and my husband was travelling on business a lot, I volunteered to do Meals on Wheels.

I have always been interested in the work of UNICEF. In 1985, I, together with another two couples, was asked to open an Ipswich branch of the children's charity. During my 30-year association with UNICEF we raised more than £100,000.

When our local church groups got together to provide a soup kitchen for the homeless and needy of Ipswich, I joined my own church group on Tuesday evenings to distribute soup and food. This lasted nearly twenty years. Joining Age Concern and visiting specific elderly people seemed a natural progression for me.

Swiss Review: What have been some of the highlights of your work as a volunteer?

LHW: I would like to think many of my activities have made a difference to people, certainly fundraising does that. However, nothing quite compares with the response of elderly, lonely people when you visit them, particularly when they haven't seen anybody for days. This more than anything moves me. However, possibly most satisfying, apart from the joy in assisting people in need, has been the response from my family and friends in assisting and supporting me in the projects and fundraising events. I would like to think their involvement has led them to become more aware of others' needs and subsequently get involved with their own chosen charities.
